Both Emma and Ross are against the idea of marriage, but the pressure from their parents is too strong. Evelyn and Thomas use their weaknesses to convince them to marry and create a home for their unborn child.

As a peace offering, Emma and Ross agree to go for a vacation together. Their parents want them to get to know each other and to find out if they could build a family together.

On the sunny beaches and blue lagoons, the young couple finally discovers the mutual affection they have for each other.

Ross asks Emma to marry him – this time, because he loves her.
