Color Coded the Novel - Part I Kim Carter Johnson

Armand Baptiste's has never been denied anything in his young life, at least not until now. When he meets a beautiful dark, mahogany skinned girl and instantly falls in love, he learns that there's no room for 'that kind of love' in the life of his wealthy Creole family. He is a privileged Creole of Color in 1960's New Orleans where marriages are arranged based on skin color and economics. His ruthless mother will stop at absolutely nothing to end his relationship, but soon realizes learns that life is packed with irony and there's always a price to pay for decisions based on the superficial.
